An illegal immigrant was arrested for allegedly raping a 16-year-old girl and sparking an internal investigation at the Royal Canadian Mounted Police (RCMP) in Vancouver. RCMP officials confirmed on Wednesday that they arrested the illegal immigrant on Tuesday for allegedly raping the teen with the help of the accused's 20-year-old boyfriend, who was also arrested. The teen, who is an Indigenous Canadian, was on the dating app Grindr with the accused when she met him in person, police claim. She proceeded to pick up the man who had asked for a date. While the pair were driving in a vehicle, the teen told police, she remembered reading a story online about former U.S. President Barack Obama's deportation operation that scooped up illegal immigrants, who then traveled from the States to Canada. "She thought that it was going to happen to her, so she went along with the alleged victim," Sergeant Brian Montague told CTV News. "And so it appears to us that this woman was lured into this by the man to commit this act," he said. Despite his status, the accused was in Canada for more than six years and was convicted of a crime in the United States, Montague explained. When the teen spoke to her parents about what had happened, she shared what she had been through during her ordeal. "It wasn't until that second interview with her parents when she disclosed that this man had raped her,” he said. When contacted about the allegations, local NAACP chief on the RCMP Edward Salloway was shocked by what had happened and demanded immediate action to ensure that illegal immigrants who commit criminal acts in Canada are detained. “We are calling on the government to immediately apprehend and deport these criminal invaders,” he said.
