Empire strikes back? Harriet Alexander was one of a number of staff who reported seeing a smoke bomb go off at the St James campus of the University of Exeter. A smoke bomb was used in a drunken punch-up at the St James Centre of the University of Exeter last night. The dispute was between students and staff, and police are understood to have been called by staff who saw one student throw a smoke bomb into a room where they were having a meeting. “The smoke started coming in and we thought it was a fire alarm,” one of the witnesses said. “But it wasn’t. Someone threw a smoke bomb and it exploded. The students went mad. I’ve been a student here for 14 years, and I’ve never seen this before.” The smoke bomb was thrown into a meeting room by a male student at about 7.15pm. The device exploded, shattering windows in the room and causing the meeting to end. A similar incident occurred at the University of Central Lancashire in the autumn.
