New mobile game, match your wits! There are 7 kinds of mushrooms in the forest: White mushroom.
You, without thinking, eat mushroom and your inner senses wake up! Your vision starts to blur and then, and then the scene is filled with many colors and objects you always notice even when you are not awake. Red mushroom. Once you eat it, you lose consciousness. And your inner senses are not working. Yellow mushroom. Just once you eat, you turn into a big tomato! Your strength increases and your head grows bigger, but you lose self-control and start to shout. Green mushroom. Just once you eat, you take the eyes off and get something completely different. But in a very short time, you find that you like it. Then in a short time, you are very happy with it. Grey mushroom. You are cut.
You feel pain. You start to feel bad. Blue mushroom. You feel well. But you are falling asleep. Black mushroom. You do not notice a thing. You are dying in this dream. You don't notice a thing. Please note: Also, the black mushroom is not included! The menu with all the mushroom types will appear.
However, when you access the menu, the black mushroom disappears. Total 33 kinds of mushrooms! And do not miss the challenge, the user who has longest mushroom games will win! We IgG4 and IgG1. Hyperfiltration is found in Type 1 diabetes mellitus and is a key factor contributing to development of diabetic nephropathy. The role of IgG subclass antibody response to tubular antigens in T1D nephropathy is unclear. We studied the diagnostic utility of IgG subclass to an acute kidney injury (AKI) triggering antigen, neutrophil gelatinase associated lipocalin (NGAL) in relation to renal filtration index (RFI) and microalbuminuria in adult T1D patients. We tested the ability of 7 IgG subclass antibody levels measured by ELISA to diagnose idiopathic IgG4 antibody mediated tubulointerstitial nephritis (TIN) in 81 T1D patients with RFI >13 ml/min/1.73m². In addition, we assessed the diagnostic utility of IgG4 levels to that of the neutrophil gelatinase-associated lipocalin/IgG4 index (NGAL/IgG4) and RFI in T1D patients (n=47). IgG4 levels were significantly increased in T1D patients (19.2 ± 2.9 IU/ml) compared to healthy subjects (10.9 ± 1
