[realtekwindows7drivers64bitdownload] A: Based on this page: "LPM32 (TRM32\LPM32) contains an updated version of the older "LPT1" driver. This driver has been modified to be compatible with more Windows 2000 and XP 32-bit versions. Starting with Windows Vista, Microsoft chose not to provide a 32-bit version of the LPT1 driver that is optimized for 32-bit versions of Windows. Therefore, a compatibility solution is required. In Windows XP and Windows Server 2003, this function is available, but not as optimized as it is in Windows 2000 and older." That would explain the different behaviour you're seeing with different versions of Windows, XP/2000/2003.

Glucocorticoid-mediated regulation of P-glycoprotein-mediated multidrug resistance. P-glycoprotein (P-gp) is an energy-dependent efflux pump. It plays a role in controlling drug pharmacokinetics and often contributes to the multi-drug resistance phenomenon. This work reports that the expression of P-gp in doxorubicin-resistant human hepatoma cells, HepG2-DOX, is regulated by glucocorticoids. Both dexamethasone and triamcinolone acetonide induced significant increases in the expression of mdr1 mRNA and P-gp on HepG2-DOX. The induction is associated with dose-dependent accumulation of doxorubicin within HepG2-DOX and the loss of doxorubicin resistance. The glucocorticoid-inducible doxorubicin resistance phenotype is non-P-gp-mediated because it is not reversibly blocked by verapamil, a known P-gp inhibitor. The molecular basis of glucocorticoid-induced P-gp expression is still unknown. Studies are under way to elucidate the mechanism of P-gp induction.

Q: Does the chaining of GRUB commands (`sudo update-grub`, `sudo update-initramfs`, etc) have any effect? My boot process is as follows. I'm writing this using the grub shell at the grub prompt, as opposed to the recovery/boot grub console (aka: the purple screen). I open a root shell in a Ubuntu USB stick. Mount the internal Ubuntu root partition to `/mnt`
